

ANNUAL REPORT

2018 marked a year of sweeping and positive changes at the Santa Barbara Humane Society. As the year opened, Board members were in the middle of a nation-wide search for a new executive director. In February, animal welfare specialist Kerri Burns took the helm as Executive Director.

SBHS is building relationships not only with our animal welfare partners, but with other non-profits and corporations as well. We are a community that runs best when working together. Pets are part of the family, so our programs will be geared to help from the paws up.

Expanding programs like humane education and dog training, creating more enrichment during the stay of the dog or cat until they find their forever home, and offering more medical services to the animals in our care are a few of the positive changes ahead. We will also be upgrading our facilities and infrastructures.

With new leadership, strong partnerships with the community and animal welfare organizations, and plans to upgrade the facilities for the animals in our care, the Santa Barbara Humane Society had an excellent year in 2018, and is poised for even greater success in 2019.
